In order to make the best article it is necessary to strip the roe from the sturbreak the eggs apart and to free them from membranous tissue. Next the ros is thoroughly salted, after which it stands a certain length of time. Then table salt. Each keg holds about 150 pounds. With proper care the caviare may be kept for a year or longer. For the trade it is often canned like fruit, in which condition it will stand transportation to warm countries, and will keep an indefinite length of time. It may be eaten as put up without further prepar-ation, though it is thought to be im-proved in flavor by the addition of a little vinegar or lemon juice. As the result of our examination I am led to the conclusion, and in this I am seconded by my colleagues, that death was caused not by asphyxia or drowning or by any local injury by the body coming in contact with any hard sub-stance, but by the shock from the reactionary force of the water in the whirlpool rapids coming in contact with the ulmerged body with such force as to instantly destroy the respiratory power, pressure and force of contact-a shock nerve centers, partially desicente the probable sequel of death by drowning. The cause of death in passing through these rapids being thus constant, and in no way accidental, as might be rocks, forces the conclusion that no living body can, or ever will, pass through the rapids alive; a fact established of no little importance, and an eminous warning to all future adventurers. The river bed at the widrlpool rapids assumes greatly increased precipitancy. The water strikes the anyielding rock, banks with great violence, and by reac-tion meets with such resistance as to form in the center a mountainous ridge
